

Our body has natural chemicals called neurotransmitters. These chemicals control much of how our bodies function, such as sleep, mood, pain management, cognitive function, energy, stress, inflammation, and so much more. Some examples of these neurotransmitters are dopamine, serotonin, adenosine, glutamate, endorphins and many others. Each of these neurotransmitters has different functions; for example, adenosine has a calming effect on the body. When properly balanced it helps reduce anxiety and promotes good sleep.

We also have millions of tiny receptors that are designed to absorb these neurotransmitters and maintain the appropriate chemical balance our bodies need. This balance (or homeostasis) is critical to good health. Unfortunately when these receptors lose their efficiency they can cause too much or too little chemical to be used. This is when we see conditions like anxiety, insomnia, chronic pain, depression, loss of energy, and so on.

This is where CBD comes in! CBD enhances these receptors to run efficiently in maintaining the appropriate balance of chemicals for ideal health. CBD affects so many areas of your health, because so much of your health depends on these receptors.
